DESIGN PROCESS

DATASET DESIGN PROCESS

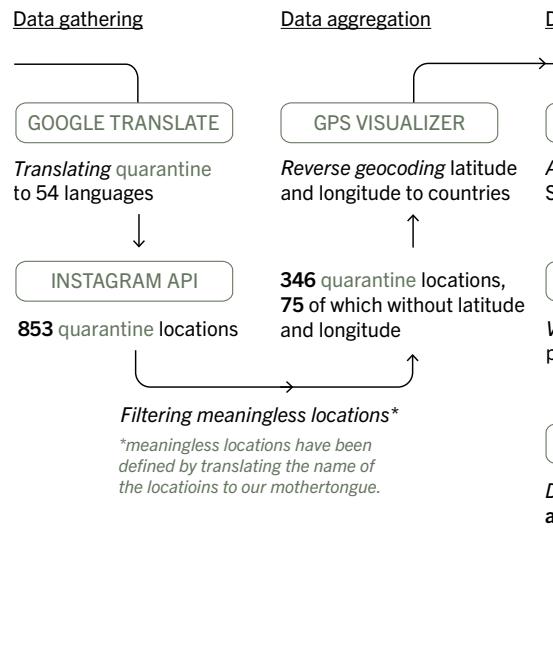

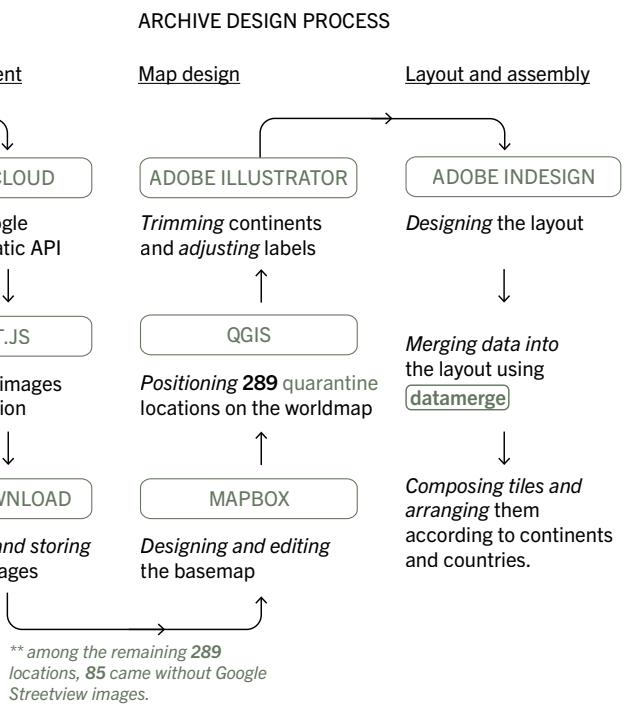

Figure 1. The process followed to construct the catalogue involved two main phases of Dataset design process and Archive design process.

“Quaran.tiles” is the physical representation of a collection of expressive geotags created on Instagram in 2020 as a response to quarantines during the first wave of infections of COVID-19. Due to the lack of vaccines and cures for the illness, the reaction of various local governments was lockdowns of multiple scales that forced people to stay at home. On social media platforms like Instagram, which offer UI affordances to tag photographs in various places globally, this became impossible for many people due to lockdowns. People in lockdown started to re-appropriate these UI affordances not to locate themselves in a specific place but rather in a fictional place that reflected their condition instead of geographic coordinates.

Due to how the platform is structured, these non-existent places are often associated with real-world coordinates, creating a mingling layer where digital aggregations of data and real-world features meet.

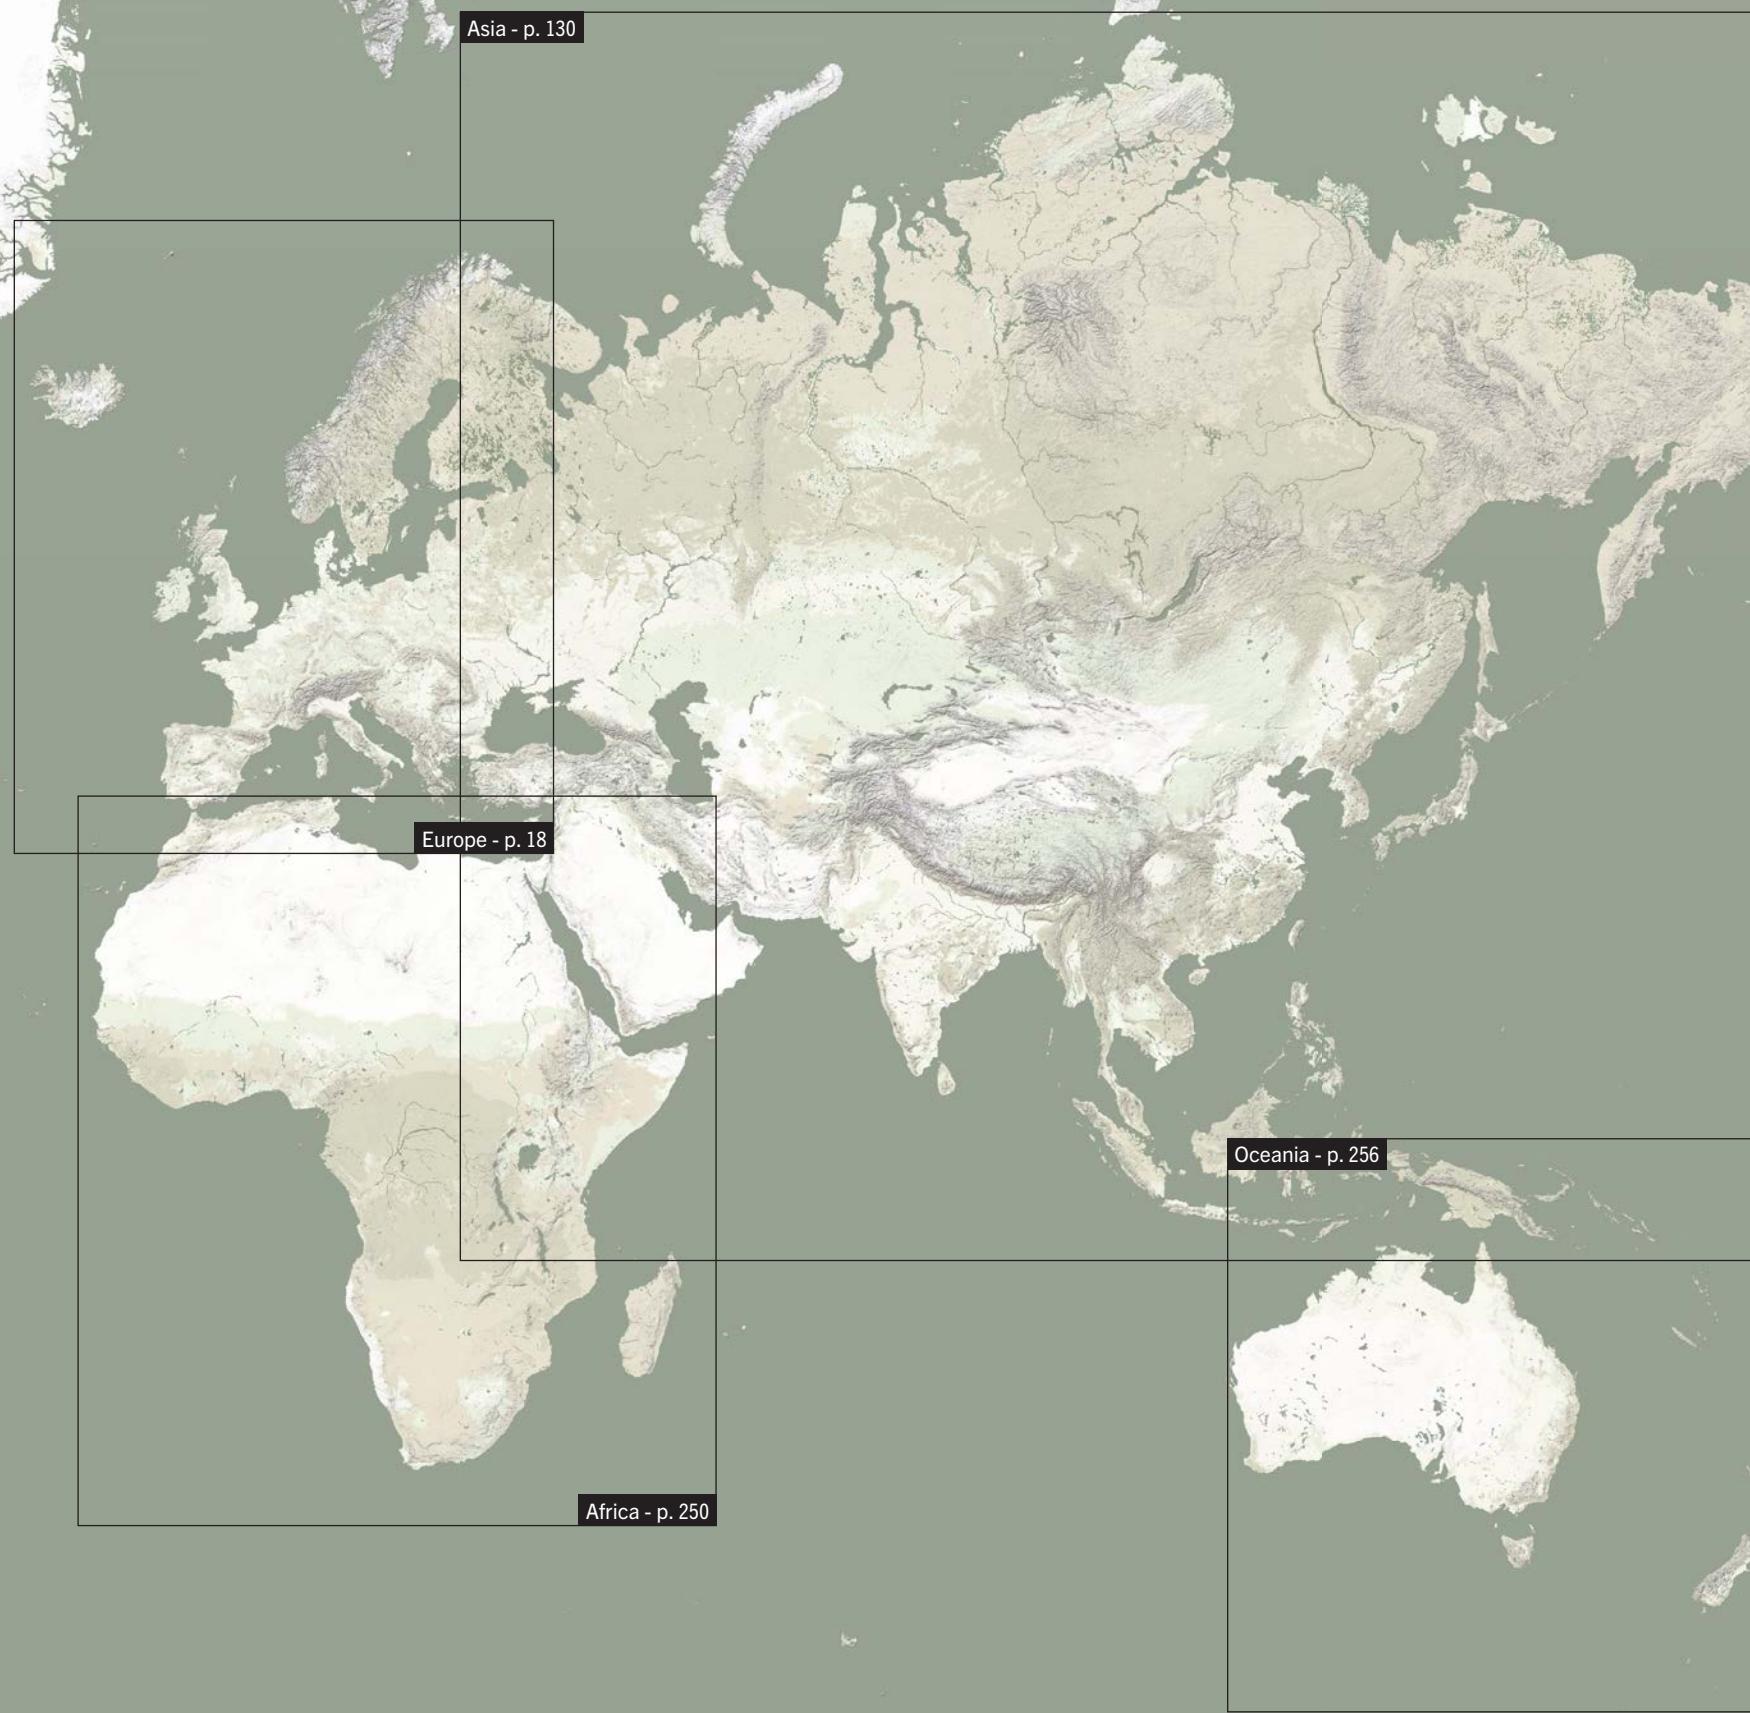

This assemblage results in a catalog of places scraped from Instagram as of summer 2020. Various levels of information can describe each place. The first layer is the one available on Instagram: the name is found on the platform, along with latitude and longitude, when available. To emphasize the relationship between these digital places and the real world locations, the address was automatically obtained through reverse-geocoding, and a collection of images from Google Streetview was downloaded as an additional layer of information.

The observer can browse the catalog to explore the phenomenon as a photographic book that transposes a digital layer into a physical one — the geolocations found on Instagram transposed into a book — to contemplate and reflect on how platforms can be exapted by users to re-interpret their UI affordances. The places are divided into continents and follow the alphabetical order to emphasize repetitions of different places, in other locations, with the same name. Each continent has its section dedicated to it, divided into:

- Map and list of all places on the continent
- Places with images from Google Street View
- Places without images from Google Street View

At the end of the book, a list of “placeless places” (those not georeferenced on the platform) is included in alphabetical order.
